

Chapter 14: It Begins

Ginny sat with her legs drawn up to her chest and her head resting on her knees. Her gaze was on the lake, where she had spent almost six hours in. She let out a shaky breath. "Hi Harry," Ginny mumbled without looking up.

"How did you know I was coming?" Harry asked as he sat down beside her. Ginny looked up at him and he could see the tears in her eyes. "Ginny?"

"I could hear your footsteps."

"What's wrong?"

"Just, he's back and that means so many things are going to go wrong." Ginny said as she rested her head on his shoulder. He held her around the shoulders. "I don't want anything to happen to you," she said quietly.

"Everything will be alright, I promise."

It wasn't long before it came to the final day. Beauxbaton and Durmstrang were getting ready to leave. "I will miss you 'Arry." Fleur said as she kissed his cheek, Gabrielle did the same thing. "And thank you Ginny vor ze wonderful pictures," Fleur hugged Ginny.

"I'll be sure to send the last of them to you," Ginny said as she hugged her back.

"It was good playin' against you 'Arry," Krum said as the two shook hands.

"I hope to see you again sometime Viktor," Harry said with a smile. He watched as Viktor walked over to where Hermione stood.

The two schools left while Hogwarts waved them goodbye. Cedric approached Harry smiling. "Ready for summer?"

"As much as I can be. So what do you plan to do Cedric?"

"I'm not sure yet but I'll soon find out. I hope to see you again soon Harry."

"I hope to as well, take care Cedric."

"Take care of him Ginny," Cedric said with a wink.

"Oh don't worry I will, besides I know Cho will take care of you," Ginny said with a smirk.

Cedric walked off laughing. "What was all that about?"

"Just a little agreement Cho and I made while you two were out. Come along boyfriend so we don't miss the train."

"What? I thought I was the older one here?"

"So? I am the smarter one!" Ginny said with a smirk.

Harry smiled and wrapped his arm around her waist. "Well then I think I can live with that."

The train ride back seemed like it was too short. Harry was asleep, his head resting in Ginny's lap, when the train finally came to a stop. "Time to get up!" Ron said as he and Hermione left the compartment.

Harry slowly got up and watched as Ginny grabbed her things.

"Come on Harry mum wants to say bye to you before you go off to the Dursley's again."

Harry smiled. "Alright but there is one thing left to do."

"And that would be?" Ginny asked turning to face him. Harry kissed her suddenly catching her off guard. He kissed her deeply and was glad that she kissed him back just as forcefully. Her back hit the wall as she became trapped between the wall and Harry. His arms wrapped around her tightly pulling her as close as he could. A shiver ran down her spine when she felt his tongue run across her bottom lip. Letting out a sigh she allowed him into her mouth. His tongue swept in, learning the taste of her, and filling her with the taste of him. Suddenly he released her. "What was that for?" She barely managed to get out after a moment.

"Just because I won't see you for a while. Also this is for you but don't open it till you get home," Harry whispered to her, kissing her cheek. She smiled at him and nodded her head.

The rest of the Weasleys were waiting for them. Harry had to quickly say his goodbyes for his aunt and uncle looked mad. "Bye Harry," Ginny said with a smile.

Ginny watched Harry walk off with his family, wishing he didn't have to go. It seemed like forever till she got home. In her room she set her things down and moved to open the box. Inside she found a photo album. It had her initials on the front of it. Inside was a picture of her and Harry sitting by the lake. She smiled as she found pictures of the ball, the party, and other moments. In the back of it was a picture of Harry's parents and then another of Harry and Ginny.

Sighing she looked up at her new owl. How was she going to get through the summer?